ESTABLISHED: 2010

WHO WE ARE:

At Rhiss Interior, we pride ourselves in staying attuned to the needs of our clients. We believe that building and maintaining relationships is one of the most important aspects of running an interior design firm. We've learnt to put in the time and effort to get to know our clients and build trust with them through every step of the design process.

CHANGING PATTERNS WE'RE SEEING IN RESIDENTIAL DESIGN:

Spending more time at home in the past two years has led more homeowners to conclude that space at home is important. We find that clients are opting for simpler and more practical interior designs that prioritise the availability of space and ease of maintenance.

FOCUS FOR 2022:

During these uncertain times, our company has evolved and adapted to meet the new demands of the interior design industry. We will continue to update ourselves and pick up on new trends and technology.

Subtle strength

By controlling the apartment's colour palette, the designers evoked a subtle masculine vibe that carries throughout the home. Strong sculptural elements and matte natural finishes also lend to the home's stylish aesthetic. One example is the television wall, which comprises both open and closed storage, and a bottom row of cabinets with black glass fronts.

Small but beautiful

Despite its compact size, this one-bedder bachelor pad designed by Rhiss Interior manages to live up to its full potential.

Adaptable spaces

Since the homeowner has no need for a formal dining area, the designers decided against a bulky dining table. Instead, a pull-out desk slots perfectly into the living room feature wall. It can be used as a dining table, a work desk or even a kitchen countertop.

Compact and cosy

Given that only one person lives here, privacy wasn't a main concern. As such, the bedroom wall was knocked down and replaced with black, powder-brushed, steel-framed sliding doors. This helps to open up and improve the spatial flow. It also allows the floor plan to integrate the open kitchen, forming one seamless studio-like space. For a more cohesive look, the designers replaced the top cabinets in the kitchen with black glass-fronted ones.

“When it comes to smaller homes, we have tricks to make the space look and feel larger than it actually is.”

— Wincy Tang, Principal Designer

Eating out

The apartment comes with a small balcony that enjoys expansive vistas of Singapore’s cityscape. Instead of leaving the space empty or unused, Rhiss Interior turned the balcony into an informal dining space that’s perfect for tranquil breakfasts or evening meals. It also becomes a quiet corner for the homeowner to work from home.

Laid-back life

Opening up the bedroom makes it feel less confined and more integrated with the rest of the apartment. As such, it was important that its design mirrored the rest of the home. The designers used a similar colour and material palette for continuity, but also introduced textured paint on the wall to give the space character. Now that the bedroom wall has been removed, the homeowner can enjoy his favourite movies despite the television being in the living room.

Sweet simplicity

(Left) Since space continues to be a concern in this apartment, the designers made sure that there would be sufficient storage space but that it would not overwhelm the home. For example, the bedside table is a compact and customised piece that is frill-free yet functional.

Room for growth

(Right) The apartment’s small footprint and limited floor plan meant that the designers had to come up with innovative solutions. By curating the use of materials and tailoring the storage options to the homeowner’s needs, this modest apartment manages to live up to its full potential.
